Ebay Chat is the fastest-growing and most-used online forum today. It is also the leading community for general discussion about the world of e-commerce, where sellers, buyers, traders, and artists can all meet and interact with one another. This chat forum works by keeping a list of users and a list of messages. Once the site has loaded, click on the "Chat Logger" link on the top right side of your screen. You can then choose to either reload the whole chat window or a small section of it. If you choose to reload just the area where new messages come from, you will see that the new messages will be at the bottom of the screen in a format that can easily be read. Happy Chat Toolbar: To use Happy Chat, you first need to be signed in. To do this, click on the "My Ebay" link, go to the "Signing in" tab, and follow the instructions. The chat window will load and you can read and respond to messages. Summary of Features: Ebay Chat: a forum for traders, buyers, and sellers. Customizable chat features: You can configure a customizable font, size and color for the chat window. Reloading of new messages: You can configure the interval for when new messages are reloaded, either automatically or manually. Reloading of the whole chat window: You can configure how often you want the whole chat window reloaded, either automatically or manually. Ignore lists: You can create ignore lists of users so that they do not appear in the list of new messages, or you can delete an existing list. Saved login details: Once logged in, you can use the "Chat Logger" window to log in again in case you are not connected to the web. Saves your chat window size and location: One of the most important features of chat is the fact that you can easily scroll through the chat window and see any messages that have been posted since your last visit. If you are changing your chat window size or location, you can do so easily using the toolbar. Change the color, size and font of the chat window: You can easily change the font type, size, and color of the chat window using the toolbar. French Arctic Meteorite Crater: Extant Record for Surtseyan Impact History BOSTON (July 21, 2011) – New results from the Giant Magellan Telescope Project at the Carnegie Institution of Washington and the University of Arizona confirm that the Horseshoe Canyon meteorite, discovered in western Greenland in 1856, is the remnants of a large impact crater and not a natural cave. The findings were published online in Geology today. The finding reveals evidence of a very large impact event in what is today the European Arctic. The discovery documents the earliest known surface appearance of impact-heated quartz and other minerals, which both record the most extreme temperatures and pressure that an impact event can produce and preserve evidence of ancient events. The Horseshoe Canyon meteorite, which includes a 3.4-meter-wide (11-foot-wide) shattered boulder, was found in the mountains of western Greenland by explorers from the Danish Arctic Expedition under the command of Dr. Henrik Harboe in 1856. The stone attracted the attention of British astronomer William Lassell, who recognized its significance in 1883 and extensively described it in his magnum opus, A Meteorite from the Polar Regions. The appearance of the Horseshoe Canyon meteorite in recent years has fueled speculation that it was a natural cave, leading to speculation that the meteorite may be of extraterrestrial origin. The discovery of impact glasses at the site in 2010, however, served as a strong argument against any possible connection. Even the number of impact glasses preserved at the Horseshoe Canyon site indicated that the original impactor was at least 10 times larger than the asteroid that caused the Chicxulub impact in what is now Mexico 65
